Workshop Overview

The greatest challenge to education in a knowledge society is not how to effectively help learners to acquire a defined set of knowledge and skills, but in helping them to learn how to manage, work creatively with ideas and to contribute to the creation of new knowledge. In knowledge building discourse, ideas, theories hypotheses and other similar intellectual artefacts are objects of inquiry to be scrutinized, improved and put to new use as participants engage in progressive discourse analogous to the inquiry processes of research communities. Education and practice need to undergo a revolution to become idea-centred from activity-centred and to become collaborative learning from independent learning, so that learners can embark on a knowledge building trajectory from a young age to prepare for the challenge. Thus it is essential to construct and cultivate learning environments such as learning communities, organizations, campuses, etc., for learners to develop these abilities. Exploring new pedagogical approaches and technologies in learning experiences in higher education offers educators a clear opportunity to reflect on and expand their teaching methods. Collaborative teaching strategies are a mindset that transforms teaching by guiding educators to be more thoughtful and intentional about their instructional decisions. The workshop will consist of multiple components that will be arranged to engage the interest of the participants. Each session will have a facilitator who will use both instructional and experiential methods to enable the participants to meet the objectives of the workshop. The resource persons will share their expertise and experiences to facilitate learning. During the course of the workshop, participants will work on individual and group activities and participate in peer-reviews. The two - days workshop will offer participants a unique opportunity to network, share experiences with professionals and explore new solutions with the means to improve theoretical and practical understanding of pedagogical principles.
